Bloomberg faces big challenges if he leaps into 2020 White House race

Paperwork to run in Democratic primary filed Friday.

Former Mayor of New York City Michael Bloomberg. REUTERS

Former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg has the money and name recognition to shake up the Democratic presidential race, but he will face huge hurdles to the nomination if he makes the leap to become a formal candidate.

The billionaire media mogul is laying the groundwork for a possible candidacy and kept his options open by filing paperwork on Friday to run in the Democratic primary in Alabama, which has an early deadline for ballot qualification.

The decision to run would be an about-face for Bloomberg, 77, who announced in March that he would not seek the White House.

Ranked by Forbes as the eighth-richest American with an estimated worth of $53.4 billion, his potential bid drew immediate criticism that he was just another wealthy businessman trying to buy an election.

> "If we run, we are confident we can win in states voting on Super Tuesday and beyond, where we will start on an even footing."
> Howard Wolfson, adviser to Michael Bloomberg

Bloomberg also will face questions about his record as a three-term mayor of New York, particularly from the Democratic Party's vocal progressive wing, and about why he is needed in a race that still has 17 candidates vying to challenge Republican President Donald Trump in November 2020.

"There is no constituency for Michael Bloomberg that isn't already taken by one of the candidates who are already running," said Charles Chamberlain, chair of the Vermont-based progressive group Democracy for America.

But Bloomberg is skeptical that any of the current candidates can beat Trump, according to a spokesman.

The late entry into the race would force Bloomberg to play a quick game of catch-up to build the sort of campaign infrastructure his rivals have spent months constructing.

As a result, Bloomberg will skip early contests like the Feb. 3 caucus in Iowa and emphasize later voting states where his rivals will not have as big an organizing advantage, starting with the Super Tuesday primaries in at least 15 states including Alabama on March 3.

"If we run, we are confident we can win in states voting on Super Tuesday and beyond, where we will start on an even footing," Bloomberg adviser Howard Wolfson said in a statement reported by the Washington Post.

Opinion polls show three contenders battling at the top of the Democratic race: U.S. Senators Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts and Bernie Sanders of Vermont, who lead the progressive wing, and moderate Joe Biden, the former vice president.

Bloomberg has been critical of Warren and her desire to institute a tax on the superwealthy, which she would use to fund programs ranging from universal healthcare to free college tuition.

Biden, meanwhile, has turned in uneven debate performances and lagged behind his top rivals in fundraising. Bloomberg would likely seek to appeal to the same moderate voters drawn to Biden.

"It's almost like he's running because this billionaire wants to stop Elizabeth Warren," Brad Bannon, a Democratic strategist who advises progressive groups and labor unions, said of Bloomberg. "It's lousy for Joe Biden but great for Elizabeth Warren."

Public opinion polls show most Democrats do not share Bloomberg's dissatisfaction with the contenders. A Monmouth University poll taken in late October and early November found three-fourths of Democrats were satisfied with their choice of candidates and just 16% wanted someone else.

At 77, Bloomberg, the chief executive officer and founder of Bloomberg LP, would be the second-oldest candidate among the Democrats in a race where age has been an issue. Sanders, who took time off the campaign trail after a heart attack, is 78. Biden is 76, and Warren is 70. Trump is 73. REUTERS

'Home' drifts down Thames in climate protest

2 A floating mock-up of a typical British suburban home was seen slowly sinking into the Thames in central London on Sunday in a protest organized by Extinction Rebellion to demand politicians fighting a Dec. 12 general election act on climate change. Goldman probe after Apple Card algorithm tweets

3 A probe into Goldman Sachs Group Inc's credit card practices has been initiated after tweets from a tech entrepreneur alleged gender discrimination in the new Apple Inc card algorithms that are used to determine credit limits. In a series of Twitter posts starting on Thursday, David Heinemeier Hansson railed against the Apple Card for giving him 20 times the credit limit that his wife got, Bloomberg reported on Saturday. Hansson, who is the creator of web-application framework Ruby on Rails, didn't disclose any specific income-related information for himself or his wife but said they filed joint tax returns and that his wife had a better credit score, the report said. New York's Department of Financial Services confirmed that an investigation was being conducted. REUTERS

Elevated stroke care in Philadelphia and beyond

In cooperation with Jefferson Health
HOME OF SIDNEY KIMMEL MEDICAL COLLEGE

ASK JEFFERSON HEALTH:

Every four minutes, someone in the U.S. dies of a stroke. It's America's fifth leading cause of death and the number one cause of long-term disability. Now for a bright spot—many stroke symptoms are manageable if treated quickly. Metro spent time with Howard M. Natter, M.D., a Jefferson Health neurologist, to clarify how to recognize and treat a stroke.

What is a stroke?

In about 80 percent of cases, a stroke is due to a lack of blood flow to a specific part of the brain. In the other 20 percent of cases, it's due to bleeding in the brain itself. When there's a lack of blood flow to the brain, either from a clot that spread from another part of the body or a blood vessel that has closed, cells in the brain die.

What are the symptoms?

We use the acronym BE FAST to help rapidly recognize the symptoms.

- Balance: Is the person struggling to stay balanced?
- Eyes: Is there a sudden loss of vision in one of the eyes?
- Face: Does the face look uneven?
- Arms: Does one arm drift downward when you hold both of them up at the same time?
- Speech: Does speech sound strange? Is it slower? Does the person have trouble getting words out?
- Time: For every minute that you waste during a stroke, about two million brain cells die.

How soon after a stroke do symptoms appear?

They develop immediately, and the ability to adequately treat the stroke goes down the longer you wait. There's a medicine we can give for stroke in the emergency room called tPA, which is an intravenous medicine that is a clot buster. It's very effective in reversing the problems that a stroke causes, but we generally have to start administering it within three to four and a half hours of the onset of the stroke.

How else is stroke treated?

It depends on the type of stroke and the symptoms. Common treatments include physical therapy, occupational therapy and speech therapy as needed. We also want to make sure your blood pressure is under control. In addition, we do a series of diagnostic tests to get a better idea of what caused the stroke so that we have a better idea of what to do in the long term.

Is there any way to reduce your stroke risk?

Yes! We think about 80 percent of strokes are preventable through controlling risk factors for stroke. The main ones are high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes, sleep apnea, and controlling atrial fibrillation, which is a cardiac arrhythmia. Lack of exercise is another risk factor.

What's special about Jefferson Health's approach to care?

Jefferson Health has created a stroke network that begins at Jefferson Hospital and then spreads out through the community. We're focused on delivering outstanding and innovative stroke care. For instance, there's a subset of patients who have a blockage in a major blood vessel in the brain (large vessel stenosis) who are good candidates for a procedure called endovascular thrombectomy, where catheters are put into the blood vessels of the brain and clots are pulled out. Stroke patients who present to one of the hospitals in the Jefferson Stroke network can be rapidly transferred to Jefferson for this new procedure. Again, timing is everything—the sooner you go to the emergency room, the better your odds of recovery.

More information can be obtained at JeffersonHealth.org/Stroke or from the American Stroke Association.

Bolivia's Morales resigns after protests over disputed October election

An audit of the Oct. election revealed serious irregularities.

Bolivian President Evo Morales said on Sunday he would resign after the military called on him to step down and allies deserted him following weeks of protests over a disputed election that has roiled the South American nation.

Morales, in power for nearly 14 years, said in televised comments that he would submit his resignation letter to help restore stability, though he aimed barbs at what he called a "civic coup."

"I am resigning, sending my letter of resignation to the Legislative Assembly," Morales said, adding that it was his "obligation as indigenous president and president of all Bolivians to seek peace."

Vice President Álvaro García Linera also resigned.

The resignation of Morales, a leftist icon and the last survivor of Latin America's leftist "pink tide" of two decades ago, is likely to send shockwaves across the region at a time when left-leaning leaders have returned to power in Mexico and Argentina.

Pressure had been ramping up on Morales since he was declared the winner of an Oct. 20 vote. The head of Bolivia's armed forces earlier on Sunday said the military had asked him to step down to help restore stability after weeks of protests over the election.

"We suggest the President of the State renounce his presidential mandate, allowing peace to be restored and the stability maintained for the good of our Bolivia," General Williams Kaliman, the commander of Bolivia's armed forces, said shortly before Morales announced his resignation.

"Likewise, we ask the Bolivian people and mobilized sectors to shed attitudes of violence and disorder among brothers so as not to stain our families with blood, pain and mourning."

Earlier on Sunday, Morales had agreed to hold new elections after a report from the Organization of American States (OAS), which conducted an audit of the Oct. 20 vote, revealed serious irregularities in the election.

The OAS report said the October vote should be annulled after it had found "clear manipulations" of the voting system that called into question Morales' win, with a lead of just over 10 points over main rival Carlos Mesa.

"I am resigning, sending my letter of resignation to the Legislative aseembly ... [it is an] obligation as indigenous president and president of all Bolivians to seek peace."
President Evo Morales

The resignations of Morales and his vice president meant it was not initially clear who would take the helm of the country pending the results of new elections.

According to Bolivian law, in the absence of the president and vice president, the head of the Senate would take over provisionally.

The election standoff has dented the image of Morales - who has helmed Bolivia through a period of relative stability and economic growth - and hit the landlocked nation's economy. REUTERS

Injustice remains despite public shaming protests

Two years after the Harvey Weinstein scandal, fight for fundamental rights continues.

LUZ LANCHEROS, MWN
letters@metro.us

Producer Harvey Weinstein, despite his efforts to evade justice, could not prevent himself from being brought to trial. It did not stop him from going to a New York club in mid-October, where he was confronted by two actresses. They came forward denouncing abuses and the actions placed to cover them up, which led way to the #MeToo movement on social networks. It did not appear without controversy and was criticized for being a "witch hunt" (Catherine Deneuve among other French intellectuals even wrote a letter against #MeToo, although the actress noted that she was not referring to the victims). Several heads of the movement, which was replicated throughout the world, were later intimidated and have faced all kinds of legal and economic problems, such as Rose McGowan and Asia Argento, who had to admit that she had sex with a minor and, in this way, was delegitimized in her claim against Weinstein.

Actors and directors such as Kevin Spacey and Roman Polanski, among others, were banned from the industry for accusations of abuse against them. There was even a page to detect if the participating actor had ever been reported for abuse and people also began to talk about how women have been harassed and violated from childhood, giving rise to feminist initiatives and platforms. But has this conversation changed anything?

"Personally, the #MeToo movement and others such as #NiUnaMenos (Not One Less)or #MiráCómoNosPonemos (Look How We Are) in Latin America, have put on the media agenda the issue of gender and sexual violence that women suffer, and that occurs in various situations," Michelle García, Peruvian journalist and activist, told to Metro.

Sexist and patriarchal behaviors that have been normalized for a long time and have become everyday practices have been evidenced and made visible.

"There are many women who, in the midst of this debate, have taken into account and named the gender violence we have been living for years, in spaces that can often be considered safe. Now, with the #MeToo movement arriving to spaces such as cultural industries, with actresses and actors, characters of popular relevance, a group not very well familiarized with the problem of violence, a direct impact was achieved and that has unleashed a phenomenon, triggered a wheel that is not willing to stop. And although there is great diversity, the common goal is to stop violence and impunity, and if states refrain from doing so on the criminal side, it is society that now sanctions publicly. It is not over, we have advanced. And in a context like the one we are in, it is a great achievement," García continued.

Activist, editor of feminist magazine Volcánica, as well as co-founder of the social media platform and initiative "Las Viejas Verdes" (Green Women), Catalina Ruíz-Navarro agrees, although she affirms that it is a conversation that has not been the same in all countries.

In fact, in Latin America (and even with Tarana Burke, who created the #MeToo hashtag), by 2015 and 2016, the #MiPrimerAcoso (My First Harassment) and #MiPrimerAsedio (My First Siege) viral hashtags were created, but the movement and complaints have not had the same effect everywhere, especially where patriarchal structures are stronger.

"In Mexico, for example, something happened that had a freezing effect: a man, accused of sexual harassment of minors, of taking photos of 13-year-old girls, committed suicide after he was denounced. Nobody commits suicide because of a public shaming, but the event ended up blaming the feminist movement for his suicide, as well as many others and that had a freezing effect on the complaints there. It literally ended them. So, in a sense it's one step forward but two steps back, because we have a pending discussion about what feminists understand by justice, because it's not punitive and criminal, because it does not reach us. It doesn't cover us," Ruíz-Navarro stated.

21st century feminism, 2nd century practices

Although the case of "La Manada" caused worldwide outrage for a sentence that only convicted for abuse and not sexual aggression against the five teens who gang-raped a 14-year-old girl, in Argentina and the United States abortion and reproductive rights have had serious setbacks in judicial decisions. And if we look at it globally, the issue does not improve: according to the World Health Organization, one of three women worldwide has experienced sexual or physical violence. At least one third of those who have been in a relationship have been violated by their partner. And globally, approximately 38 percent of female murders are committed by a male partner. In turn, practices that seem eradicated remain more current and dangerous than ever, such as genital mutilation and child marriage. UNICEF shows in its 2019 figures that 4 out of 10 women in sub-Saharan Africa were married before the age of 18, followed by Southeast Asia and Latin America and the Caribbean, practices that are still culturally allowed.

In fact, on porn search engines the "Teen" category is one of the most viewed. The problem remains structural: "This practice is still standardized in society and governments are now finally paying attention. Now, there are gender norms and stereotypes that reproduce thinking mechanisms that lead girls to think that their future is to marry and have children and that somehow encourages girls in greater conditions of vulnerability to see this as an opportunity. "Society creates these vulnerability situations via myths such as 'love has no age,' for example, not seeing anything problematic with a young woman marring a man that is 40 years older because they supposedly love each other. If it were the other way around, there would be legal censorship," Andrea Tague, spokeswoman for UNICEF Colombia, explained.

Yes, it is true that culturally things are beginning to change and many normalized cultural behaviors are now being questioned, but some countries and contexts still have to face bigger struggles against a patriarchy entrenched in a justice system, in institutions and in the organization of society. And that is the biggest debate and challenge that feminism faces today.

"Public shaming is not effective for everyone: a man with enough power is not going to be to be publicly shamed, he is immune to it. But for some men to be left wondering if what they do is actually harassment, is important."

Iraqi forces fire tear gas injuring 22 in Baghdad

Over 280 protesters have been killed by security forces so far.

Security forces fired tear gas at anti-government protesters in Baghdad on Sunday injuring at least 22 people, police and medical sources said, a day after they pushed demonstrations back toward one main square in the Iraqi capital.

One person died in hospital of wounds sustained in clashes the previous day, the sources said. Security forces on Saturday pushed protesters back from bridges they had sought to control during the week.

Police said late on Sunday that a car had exploded in an area under the control of security forces setting fire to several other vehicles parked next to it, with no casualties caused. Protesters fear that saboteurs might try to use the unrest to carry out attacks, which risks drawing a harsher crackdown by security forces, and the government has warned against the use of violence against state property or personnel.

"They're (security forces) still shooting at people, wounded are coming in," volunteer medical worker Hayder Ghareeb said earlier in the day at a makeshift clinic in Tahrir Square, now the main gathering point for demonstrators in Baghdad.

Some of those hurt had choked on tear gas and been taken to hospital, medical sources said.

No deaths were immediately reported on Sunday, however, making it one of the calmer days in weeks of unrest that erupted in Baghdad with protests over lack of jobs and services and have spread across much of southern Iraq.

Security forces have used live ammunition, tear gas and stun grenades against mostly young, unarmed protesters, killing more than 280 people, according to a Reuters tally based on medical and police sources.

Prime Minister Adel Abdul Mahdi's government has taken some measures to try to quell unrest including handouts to the poor and job opportunities for graduates, but has failed to keep up with growing demands of demonstrators who are now calling for an overhaul of Iraq's sectarian political system and the departure of its entire ruling elite.

Under pressure from powerful Shi'ite Muslim religious authorities, it has recently pledged more serious change such as electoral reform and has recognized the legitimacy of peaceful protest.

Iraqi leaders agreed at a meeting in Baghdad on Sunday that imminent electoral reform should give a greater chance for youth to participate in politics and break a monopoly on power by political parties that have dominated state institutions since 2003, state media reported.

The unrest is one of the biggest and most complicated challenges to the current ruling elite since it took power after the U.S. invasion and toppling of dictator Saddam Hussein in 2003.

Iraq has suffered decades of war, sanctions and more recently sectarian violence. The last major Sunni-Shi'ite civil strife took place during the rule by the Sunni extremist Islamic State. REUTERS

A fire rages on in Rainbow Flat, New South Wales, Australia. REUTERS

Australia battles bushfires, prepares for 'catastrophic' conditions

Fire danger levels at ten-year high.

Australian firefighters raced on Sunday to contain widespread bushfires that have left three people dead, and warned of "catastrophic" fire conditions ahead, including around the country's biggest city of Sydney.

Authorities upgraded the forecast for the greater Sydney region to catastrophic fire danger on Tuesday, the first time the city has been rated at that level since new fire danger ratings were introduced in 2009.

"High temperatures, strong winds and low humidity are forecast, making conditions dangerous," the New South Wales state Rural Fire Service said in a statement.

Conditions on Tuesday in the greater Hunter region north of Sydney were also rated as catastrophic, the highest level of bushfire danger, while extreme or severe conditions were predicted for other parts of the state.

"If a fire starts and takes hold during catastrophic fire danger conditions, lives and homes will be at risk," the statement said.

Australia is suffering one of its worst bushfire seasons, which is occurring even before the start of the Southern Hemisphere summer, with parts of the country crippled by severe drought.

> "High temperatures, strong winds and low humidity are forecast, making conditions dangerous."
> The New South Wales state Rural Fire Service

Three people have died in New South Wales since Friday, when a record number of emergency-level fires were declared in the state, and at least 150 homes have been destroyed.

Five people were listed by authorities as missing on Saturday afternoon, but local media said Sunday they had now been accounted for.

By Sunday afternoon, about half of the more than 70 fires burning in New South Wales were still not under control, with two burning at an emergency level.

Education authorities said more than 40 schools in New South Wales would be shut on Monday due to the fires.

Further north in Queensland, more than 50 fires were burning on Sunday, with emergency warnings in place for two fires.

Thousands of residents in Queensland have been evacuated and authorities warned severe fire danger was expected on Wednesday, with little reprieve this year.

"There is really no rainfall, no significant rainfall, until at least the end of the year and possibly into the new year," Queensland Fire and Emergency Services acting commissioner Mike Wassing told a news conference on Sunday.

Girl, 14, charged in death of local animal rescuer

No motive has been released for the gruesome crime.

HOLDEN WALTER-WARNER
Holden.Walter-Warner@metro.us

The murder of Albert Chernoff took another disturbing turn this week, as a 14-year-old girl was arrested in the murder of the local animal rescuer.

The Inquirer reports Ajahnae Smaugh was arrested and charged with murder on Thursday for the death of the 59-year-old Chernoff. She was also charged with tampering with evidence, obstruction of justice and possession of an instrument of crime. Smaugh turned herself into the police Thursday.

The Northeast Philadelphia man was found dead early Tuesday morning, found tied to a bed with a massive wound on his head. He also had several slash marks to his chest. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

A surveillance video released by the police showed the young girl, believed to be Smaugh, walking through the living room and the kitchen, washing her hands and opening the refrigerator and freezer before leaving the home.

$15K

The fundraiser quickly surpassed its goal of raising $15,000, raising more than that with the help of nearly 500 donors.

Chernoff was known as "Alley Cat" and was a rescuer of stray cats. He even appeared once on the show "Rescue Ink" to discuss his cause. Animal-welfare workers found a number of animals in his home after his death, including almost a dozen cats, three turtles and two frogs.

According to the Inquirer, Chernoff also worked for the city for a long time and served as building maintenance supervisor at the Philadelphia International Airport.

An added tragic element was revealed by a GoFundMe page set up to pay for Chernoff's funeral expenses: Chernoff was a veteran. An update on the page notes the funeral date as Nov. 24, almost two weeks after Veterans Day, which is Monday.

The page reads: "As you know Al's kids were his cats. We are raising money in Al's honor to help defer the costs of his funeral and provide to animal rescue. Al was a huge part of the rescue community and we want to be sure his legacy continues on. Al also was a Veteran and a loved riding his motorcycle. This is a big loss amongst the many communities Al touched."

The fundraiser quickly surpassed its goal of raising $15,000, raising more than that with the help of nearly 500 donors.

No motive has been revealed in Chernoff's murder.

Trey Edward Shults on his visceral and traumatic family-film, 'Waves'

The film starring Sterling K. Brown opens this week in select theaters.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Families work in mysterious ways. While some provide comfort, others provide tough love in order to motivate. While the ladder can create a complicated dynamic between parents and their children, it's a risk that can pay off with their children weathering the storm and finding success once they leave the nest. The new film "Waves" by writer-director Trey Edward Shults mines this subject until it goes beyond the breaking point. Although it may not be the best Thanksgiving film for those of you out there who can be triggered by overbearing helicopter parenting methods, it's a vital meditation and one that needs to be experienced on the big screen.

The film takes place in a vibrantly shot South Florida town and follows the Williams family. The primary focus of the first half of the film follows the family's prodigal son, Tyler, played by Kelvin Harrison Jr. Tyler is a star wrestler at his high school and is being groomed by his ex-athlete father, Ronald, played with blistering intensity by Sterling K. Brown. Ronald will not accept any signs of slack or failure from Tyler and pushes him to only focus on his training, working out with him on an unrelenting basis. Once Tyler finds out that he has a serious shoulder injury that requires him to quit his athletic pursuits, the thought of disappointing his father becomes too much to bear and he chooses to wrestle anyways. The unfortunate and inevitable happens to Tyler and his life begins to spiral under the scorn of his father until it all becomes too much to bear.

"The parents are very much inspired by my parents," says Shults, whose two previous films, "Krisha" and "It Comes At Night," both deal with toxic and demanding family dynamics in their own different ways. "The movie on the whole is probably the most personal and autobiographical or semi-autobiographical thing that I've done. Clearly, there's a lot of fictional narrative stuff in there as well. But the movie kind of spins around on a loop like that, where it's real stuff from my life or my loved ones' lives and it's fictional, but it's real. Tyler's high school experience was like mine and his parents were also very inspired by mine. I gained a collaboration with Kel. Especially for the relationships with the dad and elements of the mother were inspired by his parents as well. We were talking for a while as I was writing and when he got a first draft he talked about his dad. He had the nuances of a black father and a black son and a black family, that really came out with that collaboration. It became this really beautiful thing where it was deeply singular and personal to me and then it evolved into something a bit bigger, which was a big commonality between us."

Without spoiling the turn of the film, Shults eventually pivots the narrative focus onto Tyler's quiet sister Emily, who has been left alone in many ways by Ronald and their stepmother, Catharine. By shining the spotlight on the child of the family who gets neglected in the shadow of the child who the family hangs its hopes on, Shults was able to create a moving and complete portrait of this kind of family dynamic.

"Tyler is kind of the 'star child' of the family. He gets showered with all of the attention and Emily gets left in the shadows a bit. I thought it was really exciting to let this girl in the shadows come out and be the heartbeat of the film and really bring this family back together a bit," explains Shults.

If there is one thing Shults wanted to convey with this film, it's that, whether we like it or not, your family will always remain the closest thing to you no matter how fraught they can be.

Trey Edward Shults. GETTY IMAGES

"I remember from my stepfather, he was pretty hard on me and pushed me pretty hard," says Shults. "We had different personalities and he would drive me crazy a lot of the time. I didn't always understand where he was coming from. I remember getting older and away from him for a bit as you get older. I remember one time he got vulnerable with me and incredibly honest, and that one moment changed my whole perspective on this man and how he was raising me. You can be so subjective in these relationships and you can only see your own point of view. You don't see their point of view … we're all just trying to do our best, and our parents are trying to do their best. It's hard."

Getting Sterling K. Brown to sign on for the role of Ronald exceeded all of Shults' expectations and his performance should be talked about this awards season. His portrayal of a terrifying authority figure that is doing the best he can to give his children a better life the only way he knows how is simply undeniable and a battering ram of a performance.

"He was definitely the dream, but you don't know if you'll get the dream," says Shults of working with Brown. "We had sent him the script and luckily he dug it. We had a conversation and he wanted to talk to Kelvin and then we were there. For Sterling, the hardest thing was practicality. He was shooting his show at the time. That summer when we were shooting 'Waves,' we had to shift our whole work week to a Sunday to Thursday work week. He would do 'This Is Us' from Monday to Friday and fly in on a red-eye. He would get off the plane and go right into lifting weights with his son into having an emotional scene with his daughter … I thought that between being a fan of his work, especially on the O.J. show ['American Crime Story'], and following him as a human being in interviews and his energy, I thought he'd be a dream come true for Ronald for a variety of reasons. It really worked out. I love that man."

Looking for fun and unique things to do in Philly this week? We've got you covered.

ITV Wine Dinner
Nicholas Elmi's elegant cocktail bar In the Valley (ITV) is teaming up with Ravines Vineyard for a special wine dinner available for one night only. Wines from the winery in upstate New York have been a fixture on the bar's beverage mennu, and special selections will be paired with a four-course dinner menu that highlights late fall flavors. Start with a savory and sweet duck and foie gras terrine with pear mustard and sourdough. The main course is a braised lamb neck with grits and black pumpkin. Call (215) 825-7030 to make a reservation. A $50 deposit is required to hold your seats for the dinner.
Nov. 12, 7 p.m., ITV, 1615 E Passyunk Ave., $85, itvphilly.com

"Harry Potter" Quizzo Night
Ready to test your "Potterverse" knowledge? City Tap University City gives you the opportunity to show off everything you know about Hogwarts history, Quidditch rules and other fun facts about J.K. Rowling's magical world. Compete to win City Tap gift cards or a round of drinks on the house. Make a donation to the Drexel Quidditch Club to receive exclusive access to drink specials.
Nov. 13, 9 p.m.-12 a.m., City Tap University City, 3925 Walnut St., Free, citytap.com

Distiller Happy Hour
Enjoy the opportunity to learn from the whiskey experts. Representatives from Dad's Hat Distillery and Sagamore Spirits will be pouring a range of ryes from their local distilleries during this special happy hour at Bank & Bourbon. Pennsylvania-based Mountain Laurel Spirits produces several whiskeys under the Dad's Hat name including a Vermouth Barrel Finished Rye. Baltimore distillery Sagamore Spirits will have two whiskeys to sample, including their award-winning Double Oak Rye. Each spirit pour is $10, and try a cheese board from Bank & Bourbon's new happy hour menu.
Nov. 13, 4 p.m.-6 p.m., Bank & Bourbon, 1200 Market St., Pay as you go, bankandbourbon.com

Head to le caveau on top of The Good King Tavern for a unique wine experience.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Owner Chloé Grigri NEIL SANTOS

Nestled in Queens Village on the corner of Kater and 7th streets is the popular French-inspired pub, The Good King Tavern. Many Philadelphians have flocked to the hotspot to indulge in their European fare and dive into their acclaimed wine list, but there is now an even more hyperfocused way to experience the flavors of France from a wine bottle with their newly opened expansion spot, le caveau.

Le caveau, located in the once-dormant space above The Good King Tavern offers a more elevated way to sip on delicious and unique wines while also offering an eclectic atmosphere that you simply don't see often in the United States.

"Wine has always been an integral part of The Good King Tavern on the first floor, so in a sense, it was just a matter of expanding our whole philosophy of wine and honing it in to make it more specific," says owner Chloé Grigri. "It was definitely inspired more from my more recent trips to France in the Loire Valley. But it goes beyond that too, it is grounded around this energy in the wine world that you definitely experience when you're over there, which you don't really see quite as much in this country."

Grigi grew up spending time in France where her father is from, so bringing the French aesthetic and vibe to le caveau was second nature. Once you walk in, you truly get the "wine world" experience that is so accustomed to Europe — le caveau is charmingly warm, chic and completely encases guests in a sophisticated atmosphere, all without breaking the bank.

The menu ranges from all sustainably made and natural picks featuring classic to a little more adventurous choices with a few incredibly tasty bar snacks as well (think French cheese, charcuterie, olives and more.) The menu is ideal for pro-wine-bibbers, but it is also a perfect fit for novice drinkers as well.

"The wine choices vary from a wide range of choices by the glass, and a really cool bottle list that is priced really aggressively. The idea is that you're able to come in and grab a glass of wine or come in with a group of friends and get a bottle and hang out, chat and unwind," says Grigi. "Our goal with The Good King Tavern and now le caveau has always been to help novice wine drinkers find options they like without thinking too hard about it. I definitely have stuff on there that is not too complicated but still really delicious. If somebody wants to start there and ask questions, they are welcome to, or if someone wants to start there and ask no questions, they are also welcome to that as well."

Guests may access le caveau Thursdays through Saturdays (6 pm- 12 am) from 7th Street or through a nondescript door within The Good King Tavern, also making this must-try experience feel that much more special.

Before we get to the Seahawks vs. 49ers Monday Night Football betting preview, I should remind you about the best current offer in PA and NJ sports betting – a limited-time offer to obtain a free $50 VISA gift card and up to $250 in risk-free bonus money at MetroBet.us/Sugar.

All you have to do is:

1. Go to MetroBet.us/Sugar and enter promo code: METROBET

2. Deposit $50 and wager at least $50.

3. Get your free VISA gift card by going to Metro.us/Free50

There's a lot of "irresistible force vs. immovable object" storylines to this fantastic Monday Night Football matchup between the 49ers (5-3-0 against the spread) and the Seahawks (4-5-0 ATS).

San Francisco has the best defense in the league right now, as they are allowing just 241 total yards per game (first in the NFL). The Niners' passing defense is particularly elite, as it is giving up just 138.1 yards per game through the air.

But Nick Bosa and crew have not even come close to seeing anything like MVP candidate Russell Wilson yet this year. In fact, here is the list of QBs that the Niners have feasted on so far this season: Jameis Winston, Andy Dalton, Mason Rudolph, Baker Mayfield, Case Keenum, Jared Goff, Kyle Allen, and most recently Kyler Murray.

ALL GETTY IMAGES

Murray is the only one that really scares you in that group, and the rookie actually had moderate success against the Niners vaunted D on Halloween night – completing 17-of-24 passes for 241 yards, two touchdowns and zero picks.

Wilson is basically a grown-up version of Murray, and he should be capable of plastering 300-plus yards of aerial offense against San Fran.

The Niners defense is also a little bit overrated when it comes to stopping the run as they're allowing 102.9 yards per game (14th in the NFL). Big Seahawks back Chris Carson should be able to put up some solid numbers, as he's eclipsed the 90-yard mark on the ground in five of Seattle's last six games.

The play: Seahawks +6

College FB betting: Georgia at Auburn

The Auburn Tigers' sputtering offense will likely betray them in their Saturday showdown with the Georgia Bulldogs at Jordan-Hare Stadium.

Bet on this game now and get a free $50 VISA gift card at MetroBet.us/Sugar.

Bo Nix and company have scored 20 or fewer points in three of their last four contests. The freshman signal caller has completed just 55.3 percent of his throws in that span for 6.65 yards per attempt with a woeful 5-4 TD-INT ratio. Those figures simply won't cut it against Georgia's fearsome defense that allows just 10.1 points per game, good for second in the country.

The Bulldogs bring a balanced offense into this tilt, with running back D'Andre Swift (6.3 yards per carry on 147 attempts, seven TDs) setting things up for quarterback Jake Fromm (67 percent completion rate, 8.0 yards per attempt, 13-3 TD-INT ratio). Auburn's defense is tough but not elite at 13th in points allowed per game. Georgia has covered in five of their last six meetings with the Tigers, and bettors can anticipate them prevailing once more in a battle of attrition.

The play: Georgia spread

RANKING A DECADE'S WORTH OF PHILLY FIELD GENERALS

THE SPORTS PROFESSOR

GLEN MACNOW
@RealGlenMacnow

It's a slow sports week, so let's have some fun. Our city's four pro sports teams have churned through a dozen coaches and managers over this decade. Let's rank them from best to worst.

For our purposes, nothing accomplished before 2010 counts (sorry, Andy Reid). Nor does anything won in other cities (enjoy that ring, Mr. Berube).

I'm giving "incompletes" to Flyers newcomer Alain Vigneault and his predecessor, Scott Gordon. Sixers misfit Eddie Jordan, who lasted just 50 games into the decade, is mercifully exempted.

So here we go:

1. DOUG PEDERSON

Raise your hand if you snickered when Jeff Lurie hired this former backup Eagles QB as head coach. Yeah, me too. I feared the owner was seeking a yes-man after three dysfunctional years with Chip Kelly. I'm thrilled to have been wrong. Doug combined guts, creativity and people skills to direct this franchise to its first Super Bowl win.

2. CHARLIE MANUEL

The World Series came before this decade. But Uncle Charlie's Phils won 97 games in 2010 and a franchise-record 102 in 2011. Manuel was never a tactical genius, but he knew how to run a clubhouse and push players' buttons. He also turned out to be one of the nicest guys we ever met.

3. PETER LAVIOLETTE

The Flyers made numerous mistakes this decade; the biggest may have been firing this coach three games into the 2013-14 season. They haven't won a playoff round since. Lavy was a quick-tempered taskmaster who could grind on his players – but also get their best, taking the Flyers to the 2010 Cup Finals.

4. BRETT BROWN

So hard to rank. "The Process" put Brown's career W/L so deep in the red that he'll never see .500. But his job over those years was to develop, not to win. He's shown in-game shortcomings as the Sixers have risen to the playoffs. But he's smart, his players love him and he's got a real shot at glory now.

5. CHIP KELLY

Seems too high? Well, GM Chip was a charlatan, alienating everyone and making inane personnel decisions. But Coach Chip was 20-12 his first two seasons – before karma found this petulant SOB. Remember when he unveiled that high-speed offense, catching the rest of the NFL off guard? That seems decades ago.

6. CRAIG BERUBE

Another good one who got away. "Chief" was a former Flyers tough guy who finally got to stand behind the bench for two seasons mid-decade. He wasn't forward-thinking enough, so ownership axed him for a college coach. Berube went to St. Louis and won the Cup.

7. ANDY REID

If we're making an all-time list, he ranks near the top. But from 2010-12 he went 22-26. Even great coaches run their course.

8. DOUG COLLINS

Sixers fans disliked the last pre-Process coach, but give him his due for winning a playoff round in 2012. I'll never forgive him for saying of Andrew Bynum, "I hope we all keep him in prayer. He's not played for us this year, but he's still a 76er."

9. PETE MACKANIN

Managed 412 games for the Phils over three seasons and, for the life of me, I can't remember a thing about the Pete Mackanin Era – except there weren't many victories.

10. GABE KAPLER

A misfit toy for our city. Gabe got off on poor footing and never figured out how to talk to Phillies fans. More damning were the back-to-back September collapses and lack of accountability. I believe Kapler will become a solid manager down the road and far away.

11. DAVE HAKSTOL

A dour, uninspiring robot, hired under the logic that an experienced college coach would be able to improve the Flyers' young players. For the large part, the opposite happened.

12. RYNE SANDBERG

He inherited a declining team and made it worse – alienating exalted veterans while gaining no respect from upcoming youngsters. Sandberg had the strategic acumen of Homer Simpson. He quit midseason in '15, saying, "All the losses weighed on me." There were 159 of them, compared to just 119 wins.

Hey, ten years from now, will Joe Girardi rank at the top of the 2020s list?

Don't expect to see AB again in '19

Per reports, the controversial WR won't play again this season.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Facing sexual assault allegations, Antonio Brown is not expected to play in the NFL again this season. GETTY IMAGES

Antonio Brown is not expected to take the field at all for the rest of the 2019 season, according to ESPN's Adam Schefter.

It's an expected outcome for a turbulent season that has the 31-year-old facing sexual assault allegations made by his former trainer, Britney Taylor.

Brown was officially served with lawsuit papers from Taylor last week.

The NFL is expected to meet with Brown this week to address the allegations, though a resolution is nowhere in sight.

Brown is a free agent after being released by both the Oakland Raiders and New England Patriots in September.

The drama that included the type of helmet he could wear to social-media posts asking to be released saw his time end in Oakland before playing a single game. He was signed shortly after by the Patriots but was accused of rape in a lawsuit by Taylor just days later.

Brown appeared in a Week 2 game with the Patriots against the Miami Dolphins but was released before Week 3.

Teams have reportedly been in contact with Brown, who has multiple social media outbursts calling out the NFL, but none have taken the next step yet.

Even if there is a team that decides to take a chance on him, there is an overwhelming possibility that he wouldn't play.

Per Schefter, the NFL is prepared to place him on the commissioner's exempt list — making him ineligible to play until the league completes its investigation of Brown's allegations.

If that were to happen, the team that signed Brown would be forced to pay him even though he wouldn't be allowed to play.

Brown has not helped his case much, either, as he's failed to turn over all the evidence to the NFL.

There is also the possibility of commissioner Roger Goodell punishing Brown after the investigation, which could include a lengthy suspension.
